Reagan Plans Talk On Soviet Ties as Signal to Kremlin

By Michael Getler and Don Oberdorfer Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan is expected to make a major speech soon on U.S. Soviet relations that administration officials say is meant to send a positive signal to the Kremlin.

The presidential speech is expected to come before Jan. 18, when Secretary of State George P. ltz and Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko are scheduled to U.S. officials said the speech is meant to set a positive tone for that meeting which is the first such en-counter when September, when the counter time September, when the Soviet downing of a Korean jetliner produced a clash in public and pri-vate between the two diplomats.

Since then, the Russians also have suspended all three sets of arms county negotiations that were in progress; and relations have re-

One element is the expected presidential speech, which admin-istration officials described as a sign that Mr. Reagan was willing to deal with Moscow, was serious

Other elements, officials suggested, involve the likelihood that the administration will refrain from some of the harsh statements it has directed at the Soviet Union in the

Mr. Reagan already gave some indication of this when he was asked, in a Time magazine inter-view, whether he would again call the Russians the "focus of evil" as he did in an earlier speech.

"No, I would not say things like that again," he answered, "even af-ter some of the things that have been done recently.

The administration also may refrain from making optimistic pub-lic statements, as officials did in the mediate aftermath of the collapse of arms talks, about how the Russians are likely to come back quickly to those talks. Those statements may only make it more diffi-cult for the Russians to return.

Officials acknowledge that they have no idea whether Moscow would believe a new and more positive Reagan tone on improving re-lations or whether the Soviet leadership is in a position to respond favorably even if inclined to do so because of the uncertain health and status of President Yuri V. In a letter to the United Nations JOHANNESBURG — South last week, the president of the Africa announced Sunday that its South-West Africa People's Organization, Sam Nujoma, asked Sec retary-General Javier Pérez de Cuéllar to arrange a truce through direct talks with South Africa.

Mr. Botha's said South Africa would be represented at talks through its appointed administra-tor general, Willie van Niekerk. Observers said this might not be acceptable to the guerrillas, who may demand to talk directly to se-West Africa, or Namibia, and the nior South African cabinet minis ters and officials.

They called the offer an important psychological breakthrough for South Africa after declarations in the past that it would never talk directly to the guerrilla organiza-tion, known as SWAPO.

"It recognizes SWAPO's staying power as a political and fighting force and the indications that their political influence in Namibia is growing," said Andre du Pisani, a senior political science lecturer at Observers said guerrilla strength was reflected in the fact that despite high casualties in combat with better-equipped South African forces, they never appeared to be short of fighters and its leadership structure remained intact.

SWAPO has fought a sporadic bush war for 17 years with South African troops along the territory's northern border with Angola.

South Africa refuses to consider statehood for Namibia unless 20,000 to 30,000 Cubans leave Angola. The demand, backed by the United States, has been a major obstacle to progress toward inde pendence for the territory.

Underlying South Africa's con-cern over Namibia is a fear that independence could bring guerrilla war to the borders of South Africa.

Soviet Hints at Rebuke of Pilot in KAL Attack

By John F. Burns

MOSCOW — A Soviet Air Force magazine has published an article implicitly critical of the pilot who shot down a South Korean airliner four months ago.

The January issue of Aviatsiya i Kosmon-avtika, which came out Saturday, also appeared to express disapproval of the conduct of officers on the ground who supervised the interception and destruction of the airliner. Two hundred and sixty-nine persons were kalled in the incident Sept. 1.

The monthly said the key person in any air combat is the pilot and it is up to him in certain circumstances "to make the final decision." particularly when it involves identifying intruding planes and their country of chigin.

The article-criticized ground commanders who "hide behind others" and avoid judgments in difficult situations.

Although the article alluded to the downing of the South Korean airliner, it did not link its conclusions directly to the incident. But readers were likely to make the connection. Soviet statements have acknowledged

The article was signed by Colonel General Sergei V. Golnbev, an air force deputy com-mander in chief for combat training, whose responsibilities include the rules of engagement followed by the pilot who fired two heat-seeking missiles at the airliner over Sa-khalin Island in the Soviet Far East.

The article, the main feature in the magazine, was illustrated with photographs of pi-lots flying Sukhoi-15 fighters, the kind used in the attack on the South Korean plane. The journal is distributed to flight crew rooms round the country, and there seemed no doubt that it would be read as a lecture on the sons to be drawn from the downing of the Soviet military commanders defended the decision to attack the airliner. But there have been reports that officers in the Far East command of the Air Defense Forces have that the pilot who destroyed the airliner did not establish its identity.

General Golnbev laid the groundwork for his criticisms carefully. At one point in the his criticisms carefully. At one point in the article, he landed pilots who took "extreme actions" against planes that entered Soviet airspace and refused to land, as the South Korean jet did. He said behavior in such ircumstances should be modeled after a Captain Yeliseyev, who "some years ago rammed an intruding plane rather than let it escape, killing himself in the process.

> Western military attaches who read the article attached less significance to such passages than to those stressing the need for pilots and commanders to think for them-

A further signal of the general's intentions came in the opening passage of the article, when he discussed the need for vigilance against civilian airliners that deliberately violate Soviet airspace as a test of the air defenses, "as happened on the night of Sept. 1."

The general said the main task of fighter pilots who intercept intruders is to identify them. Then, he said, pilots must act "decisively and without delay," in conformity with regulations on the violation of Soviet air-

Many Western travelers arriving at Soviet border points with copies of "1984" or of Orwell's other major satire of totalitarianism, "Animal Farm," have had the books seized. But Viktor Tsoppi, a New Times writer, dismiss such conclusions. #### Bonn Expects Attacks on U.S. Bases

BONN (UPI) — West German intelligence sources said Sunday they expected new attacks on U.S. bases during the continuing installation of U.S. cruise and Pershing-2 missiles.

The sources said police intelligence officers had information that among other groups, the leftist Revolutionary Cells organization, which has been responsible for a number of attacks on U.S. soldiers and bases,

Swiss Socialists Draft Coalition Plan

BERN (AP) - The leaders of Switzerland's Social Democratic Party, the principal loser in October's general election, completed preparations during the weekend for a possible departure from the government coalition that has ruled the country since 1959.

Although the paper lists several alternatives, Helmut Hubacher, the party president, and a majority of the committee reportedly are in favor of endingthe coalition with its non-Socialist partners.

The issue of leaving the coalition arose last month after Parliament failed to back Lilian Uchtenhagen, the Socialists' official candidate and the first woman to stand for the country's seven-member Federal Council. Instead, the Parliament elected Otto Stich, who was refused party support, to fill the Social Democratic vacancy in the council.

Reagan Launches Plan to Improve School Discipline

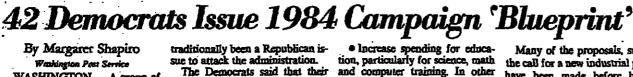

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan has opened a new administration campaign against "unruly behavior" in schools, announcing that the Justice Depart-ment would file court briefs to help expand the rights of teachers and administrators to enforce school

In his weekly radio address Saturday, Mr. Reagan also said that the Department of Education would study methods to prevent school violence and help local school districts use their resources to prevent school crime. White House officials said that Mr. Reagan would receive a report Monday from an administration working group on school violence and discioline, which Reagan advisers said they hoped would be a key issue in the election campaign.

In his speech Saturday, Mr. Reaean said that "we can't get learning back into our schools until we get the crime and violence out." He said the issue was "not a question of anyone asking for a police state" and then quoted with approval a comment by Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, on the need to solve discipline problems and "take out of our schools those students who prevent teachers from teaching."

In the Democratic response to the address, Representative Robert T. ## Lebanon: Signs of Hope

It is characteristic that even as a break appears in the clouds over Lebanon, new shooting and new political conflict occur, with the result that the modest gains are threatened. Lebanon's history of heartbreak is a standing warning against unwarranted optimism. Still. some intriguing signs are evident.

President Amin Gemayel is promoting a security plan whose promise is to expand the army and police beyond the current narrow Beirut circumference into areas of the country not controlled by foreign occupiers. A related effort - necessarily related, because the government cannot extend its authority without broadening its base — is being made to resume the talks on an internal political settlement that started and stalled two months ago.

If it is too early to foresee the fate of these two enterprises, it is possible to see why they are coming about now. Just as the deployment of the multinational force steadied the Gemayel government and encouraged it to start striving for national reconciliation, so that force's move toward the exit door has stirred the government to an extra internal effort.

The Syrians seem to be in a mood to convert the military pressures they have applied and sponsored for the last few months into some-thing of political value. They signaled this by sending home the downed American flier with Jesse Jackson. The United States responded promptly by removing one of its carriers from the sea off Lebanon. On their part, the Israelis, who are sadder and wiser for the failure of their previous attempts to manipulate Lebanese politics, are increasingly of a mind to let a made-in-Lebanon compromise take shape. The value for its own sake of movement nese political settlement needs no embellishing. Such movement could also leave the U.S. Marines and the other MNF forces safer, and thereby reduce the political pressure for their precipitate removal. It could end and perhaps reverse the escalation that last month produced the first-ever combat between American and Arab forces. We do not say that all these results have now come clearly into view. Almost any progress toward them, however, would be a blessing — and a relief and a political boon to Ronald Reagan.

Lebanon's third major need, after internal security and a political settlement, is the withdrawal of all foreign forces. That is the key to restoration of territorial integrity and sovereign pride. Is this dreaming? The casualties that fuel Israel's drive to get out continue, and so do the reprisals that lead to further casualties. Another sliding Israeli redeployment, this time with provisions for filling the resultant vacuum, is in the works. Damascus insists that with withdrawal of the multinational force and Israel's remaining forces, it would remove its troops, too. Its capacity to guide events in Lebanon without a direct military hand lends some credence to this position.

In the best of circumstances Lebanon still faces injuries and insults that no nation with a choice would countenance. Its point of reference, however, is not Swiss-style tranquillity but the savagery and indignity that have dog-ged its national life almost without cease since the mid-1970s. Maybe there is no salvation here, but it is surely worth pursuing the few signs of hope that have appeared.

Discipline in the Schools

President Reagan wants to restore "good old-fashioned discipline" in schools. Fine. That is an important issue, and it is good to hear the president sound an alarm. But in the process he distorts his education priorities and wrongly inflates what should be a matter of ential local concern. What is the man who wants to get national government off local backs doing with the ruler in his hand?

The sometimes terrifying violence that afflicted some schools in the 1960s and early '70s has waned. Still, discipline is a serious problem that teachers cite as one of their main concerns. The widely desired excellence in education cannot flourish unless troublemakers are kept from disrupting classrooms.

But Mr. Reagan's approach fails in two respects: how to alleviate the problem, and who should be responsible. Getting tough with troublemakers sounds good but misses at least half the point. What the administration has done so far makes the other half worse.

Suspension and expulsion should be reserved for students guilty of crimes, including violence. For lesser offenses it is far preferable to find disciplinary measures that keep troublemaking students in school. It will not discipline a youngster to push him into a world of almost certain unemployment and crime.

Many in-school efforts succeed. These stress parental involvement and counseling for disruptive students. But many in-school programs have suffered because of Reagan budget cuts. The Emergency School Aid Act provided some help for such programs, but it disappeared in 1981 into a block grant funded at only 85 percent of the previous level. Such efforts should be encouraged, not abandoned.

The administration has been particularly myopic about minority groups. They are twice as likely as whites to be victimized by school crime, but they are also twice as likely to be suspended from school. Where is the concern about unemployment for black youth?

Other measures that can restore discipline like reducing class size or hiring more guidance counselors, are costly. However, when it comes to education President Reagan is generous only with words. School discipline is mainly for school districts and parents to solve. They need help, not more moralism.

Interpreting Nigeria's Troubles Army officers ushered in the new year by

The good news is that General Mohammed Buhari, a Hausa from the Moslem north, is a serious, efficient soldier with government experience. Nor does the Dec. 31 coup seem to be rooted in tribal grievances: It was a move by predominantly northern people against a predominantly northern government.

The bad news is that democratic institutions are expendable. The constitution has been suspended. Nigeria's boisterous press, the freest in Africa, will surely be the next victim.

There are no easy solutions to Nigeria's problems, and Nigerians are notoriously impatient people. Coups breed coups. It is no coincidence that Murtala Mohammed, the one military leader since Nigeria became independent who attained heroic status, died by an assassin's bullet in 1976 after only seven months in power. His killer was a soldier.

- John de St. Jorre, author of "The Brothers' War: Biafra and Nigeria." writing in The New York Times.

Foreign correspondents continue to present their audience with a primitive image of democratic understanding in Nigeria. Discredited, rejected, even loathed by the majority of Nigerians, the National Party of Nigeria, buoyed by the image-building in the Western press of its leader Shehu Shagari, went confidently ahead in the 1983 elections to commit the most breathtaking electoral fraud. The scale of the robbery was unprecedented.

A civil war has been set in motion by Shehu Shagari and the hierarchy of the NPN. The preliminary skirmishes should be recognized for what they are - mere skirmishes.

overthrowing Nigeria's first democratically did they do it? Because of widespread corruption and impending economic collapse, they claim. But corruption and seemingly imminent economic disaster have been the order of the day at least since the Biafran rebellion ended and the oil boom began in the early 1970s. Indeed, under three previous military regimes corruption and economic mismanagement reached previously unimagined heights.

The real reason, or excuse, for the coup will probably never be revealed, because it almost certainly had less to do with economics, politics and social strife than with corruption not because there was too much but because the wrong people were benefiting from it.

George Howard Mitchell, a former U.S. Foreign Service officer in Nigeria, writing in the Los Angeles Times.

Reagan Plus Arafat in 1984? President Reagan's decision to accept help for his West Bank peace plan from Yasser Arafat sent this message to an outraged Israel and a startled American Jewish community: West Bank peace has higher political value than traditional election-year bidding for Jewish support. The president conveyed that message to Secretary of State George Shultz in a recent Oval Office chat.

Mr. Reagan agreed with Mr. Shultz that if Mr. Arafat's help brings Jordan's King Hussein into direct talks with Israel, Mr. Reagan would not hesitate to apply maximum pressure on the Israelis if they balked at going to the negotiating table. That sets the stage for Mr. Reagan and the Democratic nominee to battle for the small but important Jewish vote.

Whose Side Is the General On?

WASHINGTON — If this is the year that United States troops go into El Salvador, will the Reagan administration keep the news media away, as it did in Grenada? It doesn't take a key to the secret war plans locker at the Pentagon to know that the most hiscious dream of the Joint Chiefs is an antiseptic surgical strike with no television cameras or reporters snooping around until the triumphal march up Pennsylvania Avenue. Those who read General Maxwell

D. Taylor's "Swords and Ploughshares" (1972) remember that he thought the Vietnam War could have been won if only the media could have been kept away. So it was not surprising to learn from an interview with him published last week that this is still his answer when asked how future wars can be won.

This animus against the media goes beyond the battlefield. In his book the general blamed the press for "a campaign of defamation" against "the presidency, the Congress, the courts, the church and business." We could repeal the First Amendment.

General Taylor's is the third voice in recent weeks to treat the media as the enemy. This sinister new chorus began when Secretary of State George Shultz observed, in connection with Grenada, that reporters had gone along with the troops in World War II because in those days the media were on "our side."

Then the American Broadcasting

By I.F. Stone

Company's feisty Sam Donaldson challenged Ronald Reagan to explain just what "our side" meant, at the president's press conference on Dec. 20. Mr. Reagan replied that, starting with the Korean War and "certainly" in Vietnam, the media were no longer on "our side, militarily."

No one can shoot poisoned arrows more amiably than Mr. Reagan. He has a genius for the subliminal slur. The victim often doesn't realize what hit him. This was in effect saying that if the media are not "on our side, militarily," why should they be allowed to go along with the troops?
The phrasing implies treason.
Now, the truth about those "limited wars" is that they were fought against an enemy too far away and too small to qualify as a real threat to U.S. national security. That is why in neither case did presidents dare ask Congress for declarations of war. The wars just didn't make sense to people back home. Indeed, two presidential elections were won — both by Republicans — on a promise (Dwight Eisenhower in 1952, Richard Nixon in 1972) to end them. The media were, at first, too gong ho in both wars. They did not forment the disenchantment on the home front. They lagged behind it. Winston Churchill did not rally Britain in its most frightening hour with phony press releases but with

Cubans Were Told More

ON Oct. 27, a senior administra-tion official told reporters that there were 1,150 armed Cubans on Grenada and there had been no civilian casualties. On the same day the controlled press in Cuba accurately reported that the Cuban contingent numbered 750 and there had been civilian casualties.

It is an irony of this anti-communist administration that the Grenada affair was one of the few instances in history when citizens of a communist state knew more about what was going on than Americans did Four days later, officials confirmed the Cuban numbers and admitted that civilians had been killed at an accidentally bombed mental hospital.

Perhaps someone who cares about Mr. Reagan should remind him that he once spoke out on the record in favor of freedom of the press, and deplored information-control prac-tices in other administrations that were less onerons than his own.

in a block, they might well know what to do with it, but when they get it piecemeal, there's just confusion So, the general was asked, "Who, precisely, decides the right time for the press to make its report?" And the general replied: "It should be the president of the United States, directly or indirectly ... " And "indirectly," of course, means the military. The president, then, is to decide when and what to disclose about what happens on the battlefield. The general summed up his new constitutional doctrine in one succinct phrase: "He gets paid for that." The president gets paid to be the nation's super copy editor! 1983 HERBLOCK

PARIS — A little-noticed bill before the U.S. Congress holds the seeds of a military commitment that could be as momentous for the fate of the United States and the world as creation of the vast nuclear arsenals.

It is presented in demagogic language of utter cynicism. Sponsored by Senator Bill Armstrong and Representative Ken Kramer, Republicans of Colorado, it carries the incredible name of "People Protection Act." No money is involved at this stage, so it is not setting off appropriate alarm bells among Pentagon-watchers.

There are five major provisions:

Turn the new Air Force Space Command into a space command for all armed forces. • Create an Army Space Command under it for ground-based space weapons.

 Establish an agency for directed-energy weapons — lasers, microwaves, particle beams.

Take military missions of the space shuttle away from NASA's responsibility and put them under exclusive Pentagon control. • Order NASA to launch a manned space station as soon as possible. This sounds like a mere bureaucratic shuffle, but the implications are enormous.

It is revealing that the navy is not mentioned. That is evidently because there is a direct conflict between the navy's requirements in space and the ambitions of the Air Force Space Command.

lieves war in space is inevitable, fighting in space will be "the decisive form of military power" and the United States will win if it hurries.

This argument is not about defense but offense. The aim, candidly stated by Air Force Space Command planners, is to restore "pre-atomic notions of military superiority," to "make conflict at the upper levels of military violence [nuclear attack] again thinkable." They say this would be an "invigorating turn of events for the spiritual vitality of the Western democracies." The bill would give the people who hold this Strangelovian view a strong bureaucratic base-and vested interests from which to dominate future lobbying for the hundreds of billions of dollars that their plans would require. This is really a first, deliberate step to Star Wars, and that is why the planners are so keen on a manned space station. They are not satisfied with the idea of robots and computers up there.

They want to send people to fight.
Of course none of this is mentioned in public.
On the contrary, Representative Kramer calls his proposed legislation a "Manhattan Project for peace." He offers it in support of President Reagan's call to develop a space-based defense against missiles as the magic formula to end the nuclear menace. "Isn't it time we stopped holding the American people hostage to the threat of nuclear war?" Mr. Kramer said in committee testimony. "Unless we are willing to accept the prospect of a nuclear Pearl Harbor from space, we must now join the president in a new national commitment to mutually assured protection." To begin with, there are the gravest scientific

It is cruel to create the illusion that this way lies deliverance from nuclear terror. And it is harmful to the cohesion of American society, for already some people are beginning to charge disloyalty and even treason against scientists who express honest, reasoned opposition. There has been no U.S. response to last summer's Soviet suggestion of negotiating a ban on military force in space. Former Secretary of State Dean Rusk has called for a ban on a space arms race. Former President Richard Nixon has urged sharing military space research with Moscow.

The Kremlin, Too, Is to Blame for Frigid East-West Relations

appears to be in no mood to make a serious effort to accommodate the United States.

Many Americans find it tempting to blame the Reasan administration for the erosion of the superpowers' relations. The president and his too advisers have surely engaged in some unnecessary and reckless provoca-tions. Yet the Kremlin's defiant attitude cannot be explained solely by Mr. Reagan's actions. There are profound political and psychological reasons - many of them totally unconnected with anything the United States has done or said — why the Soviet establishment is ill-prepared to seek a genuine thaw.

The nasty mood in Moscow is rooted in a general climate of extreme anxiety and anger. That climate fa-vors heavy-handed posturing both at home and abroad, and the United

The first is that the whole appa-

in a way that makes it very difficult to act against the polls. Since at

there is extreme institutional pres-

The second disability is that Mr.

Reagan had no coherent vision of where he wanted to go in foreign policy. In this respect he is a man of his times. Under Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan, the United States found itself with leaders whose ambition was to make it appear in a

It was thought that new leadership would reverse many trends unfavorable to the Kremlin, that new blood at the top would mean new policies and new life for the aging Soviet system. That hope is now gone. Shortly after Yuri Andropov be-

His ascent to power would open unique opportunities to improve the U.S.-Soviet relationship. It was important for the United States not to miss the chance, my friend advised.

My friend is no liberal. He insisted that the Russian people lacked a sense of responsibility and therefore needed the whip of harsh discipline. He was also proud of Moscow's superpower status and argued that it was crucial for the Soviet Union to cut Ronald Reagan down to size. But this official and many others like him were aware that a whip alone would not be enough to resolve the complex domestic problems of an industrial society. In foreign policy, they realized that constant displays of arrogant heavy-handedness could

In foreign affairs, Moscow is facing stalemate all around: The war in Afghanistan continues; negotia-tions with China are stalled; in the Middle East, despite all their aid to Syria, the Russians have little leverage over Damascus. ed in doubts about the Soviet model of economic development. It is this sense of vulnerability mixed with anger that colors the Soviet response to the Reagan administration. At this moment of transition, then, the Soviet Union represents neither a terrible danger nor an exciting diplomatic opportunity for America. The Soviet ruling group feels overextended and unappreciated by the rest of the world. Facing the United States cycball-to-eyeball is the last thing on the Kremlin's mind, unless escalation and miscalculation push it further into a corner. Nor, however, does the Soviet leadership seem committed to seeking a peaceful engagement with Washington. From Moscow's point of view, the best way to deal with the United States today is stonewalling rather than accommodation.

Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko are expected to talk inpolitely smile at each other for the sake of diplomacy. But handshakes do not mean reconciliation - just as chill does not mean war.

By Christopher S. Wren New York Tones Service

XIAMEN, China - A bronze statue of Chen Jiageng, with his Panama hat and cane, was unveiled in great ceremony some months ago in this southeastern port city. Mr. Chen started no revolutions, led no armies, wrote no masterpacces. He is revered because he left China and made a lot of money.

Mr. Chen, known overseas as Tan Kah-kee, emigrated from Xia-men, which at the time was called Amoy, in 1900 and made a fortune as a rubber magnate in Singapore. Before his death in 1961, he had sent home enough money to endow a university and scores of secondary and primary schools. He was, in short, the kind of model emigrant that Chine is looking for today.

A wall map in Xiamen's Overseas Chinese Museum pimpoints their whereabouts—4.5 million in Thailand, 4.2 million in Malaysia, a million in the United States, down to 11 in Paraguay and 10 in Iraq.

Such emigrants, though they left China generations ago, are considered a potential source of capital and technological talent that the Chinese leadership hopes to tap for its modernization drive. The result is a campaign to court the affec-tions of the hunqian, a term for overseas Chinese that means bridges to China."

Chen Pixian, a senior official of the Communist Party Secretariat, recently told the Zhigong Dang, or Public Interest Party, an organization of returned overseas Chinese, that the unity of the hungino with relatives at home contributed to China's modernization and reunification. Mr. Chen thanked the orga-mization for helping attract $56 million worth of projects by overseas Chinese.

Xiamen says it is the roots for 200,000 overseas Chinese, who live mostly in Southeast Asia. Wang Chunlin, director of Xiamen's Offace of Overseas Chinese Affairs, said one out of six in Xiamen's population of 960,000 had overseas elatives who sometimes sent back cash or linury goods.

With China's opening to the West and two overnight ferries a work now operating from Hong Kong, more overseas Chinese have come back to visit Xiamen. Mr. Wang said such tourists had in-creased from 20,000 in 1980 to 50,000 this year.

"The huaciao are Chinese, so their hope for the motherland's prosperity is strong," Mr. Wang said. "It's understandable for them to return to see what is happening in their homeland."

For such returning sons and mghters, China has a scale of hostality. At the lowest level are 270,000 Indochinese refugees, who have been resettled mostly as laborers on state farms with little prospect of resuming former lives as traders or shopkeepers.

Higher on the scale are "compatriots" from Hong Kong, Macso or Taiwan, who are not considered real huagiao because they live in territories that China intends to recover. The warmest greetings are reserved for the most successful emigrants, such as American scientists and wealthy Hong Kong busi-

Mr. Kastler's contribution that bore directly on subsequent development of the laser was the discovcry of the use of light waves to elevate the energy levels of atoms to specific, unstable states. When stimulated by light at a proper wavelength, they cascade down to a lower state, emitting light waves of a uniform wavelength. This optical "pumping" effect was exploited by Dr. Charles H. Townes of the University of California at Berkeley and others to produce the intense, narrow beams of uniform wavelength characteris-

Pre-Election Polls Boost Danish Conservatives

COPENHAGEN - Denmark's 3.8 million voters will elect a new parliament Tuesday in what many observers believe will be an ideological showdown between the country's long-established socialism and its new conservatism. Voter opinion polls indicate a landslide for Prime Minister Poul Schluter, 54, a Conservative, and his 16-month-old coalition over the opposition Social Democrats, the country's biggest party.

After a year of national economic improvements, the voter surveys dicate that the Conservatives may double their current 26 seats in the 179-seat Folketing, or parlia-

They also indicate, however, that some of the Conservative gains could be at the expense of the party's Liberal, Center-Democrat and Christian coalition partners. A poll by the Observa Institute published last week in the conser-

Although military matters are hotly debated in Denmark, the election campaign has centered on economics. Mr. Schluter called the election Dec. 15, before his fouryear term was up, when his 1984 finance bill became the first budget in 54 years to be rejected by the

However, an article in the same issue, entitled "Greek-Turkish Suspicions Resurging Along Border," mentions "the large Turkish minority in Greece." That is a mistaken term. As to Turkish fears of Greece, I find them hard to believe. Turkey has a population of 40,000,000. Our population has not yet reached 10,000,000. Turkey has occupied northern Cyprus since 1974 and has claims on the seabed and the airspace of the Aegean. We have no ms against Turkey. Turkish fear of Greece is hardly explicable.

Regarding the science feature "Was Major Galileo 'Discovery' Stolen?" (IHT, Dec. 15):

That an obscure professor from the University of Indiana should accuse Galileo of "stealing" ideas is no surprise. The surprise is that the International Herald Tribune should give the story any space. Attacks of this sort have long been an academic shortcut to attention.

One pops up every few months: a breathless report of a long-known Jefferson liaison, or a vaguely reasoned attribution of Shakespeare to someone else. A favorite, regularly refuted, is that Darwin stole the idea of natural selection from Wallace. No country, no person, no discipline is safe. The report, by the National Association of Purchasing Management, also noted a slowing of delivcries from suppliers — a good sign, as it tends to mean suppliers have backlogs of orders — and a slight growth in inventories, which reacted to the rise in production. Prices increased moderately.

"It looks to me as though we are going to start the quarter off with a bang," said Edward Yardeni, chief economist at Prudential-Bache Securities. "The sharp increase in the purchasing managers' index, com-bined with the surge in consumer sentiment indices, suggests that everybody's happy."

The buying agents' index is based on responses from 250 managers who buy equipment and supplies for industrial companies. A reading below 50 percent indicates that the economy is declining, while a measurement above 50 percent shows it expanding.

Charles T. Haffey, who is in charge of compiling the responses and is also vice president of the corporate purchasing division at Prizer Inc., said employment had been rising since June. In December 21 ber, 21 percent of the group's memnization's members reported better production, while 6 percent said that it was worse. In November, 38 percent had higher production while 6 percent said it was lower.

The strong rate of new orders suggested that there would be contimed improvement in production and employment. Forty-four per-cent of the purchasing agents said orders were better in December. while 10 percent said they were worse. A month before, 42 percent said they were better while 10 per-cent said they were worse.

The group said prices continued to rise in December, but it added that there had not been an acrossthe-board movement all year.

U.S. Mutual Funds Fell Short in '83 Of Performances of Recent Years

By David E. Sanger New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Investors who loaded up on hightechnology mutual funds when the U.S. stock market boom started 18 months ago made a killing in the first half of 1983. But those who failed to bail out by mer very likely suffered heavy losses that often viped out their earlier gains.

The funds that did well in the last half of the year were heavy in international stocks or more traditional inesses like tobacco and insurance.

Those are the conclusions of the first full analysis of bow mutual funds performed last year, released last week by Lipper Analytical Services. The numbers show that despite the overall strength of the market last year, most investors who profited in mutual funds did so by radically redirecting their portfolios by the beginning of the third quarter.

There were two sharply different markets last year, and you had to move fast to catch them," said A. Michael Lipper, president of Lipper Analytical, So while some high-technology stocks still ranked among (Continued on Page 11, Col. 5) the best performers for the year, "all the money in the

The biggest winner in 1983 was the Oppenheimer Regency Fund, a fairly small, diversified fund operated by Oppenheimer Asset Management Corp.

"I just did less wrong than everyone else," said George Boltres, the fund's manager. He said his $32million fund mixed high- and low-technology industries, specialty retailing companies and financial services, all in "rapidly growing areas."

He said his own portfolio included many of the stocks in the fund, as well as shares of the fund. "It makes me more careful," he added.

He and several other successful fund managers said that a key to success in the second half of the year was retaining flexibility. "With a big fund, you lose your chance to move very quickly," Mr. Boltres said. In October, for example, he dumped most of his riskier stocks, whose prices were excessively high when compared with the company's short-term earnings. These (Continued on Page 9, Col.1)

NEW YORK - The saga of Warner Communications Inc. and its flamboyant chairman, Steven J. Ross, is the sort of real-life drama that might be portrayed in the films Warner spins out. Last week, the Australian media baron, seeking to buy as much as 49.9 percent of Warner and hinted at a proxy fight — an action that sent fears of a takeover through Warner's executive suite. To fend him off, Warner placed 25 percent of its shares in the friendlier hands of Chris-Craft Industries Inc., whose ownership of television stations might cause regulatory prob-lems for Mr. Murdoch.

Mr. Ross's problems began long before Mr. Murdoch made his first move in early December by buying 6.7 percent of Warner's stock. The any had been ailing for more than a year, since the collapse of Warner's most dynamic business, Atari. The last year has seen Warner burdened with problems. Its stock, which soared to $63 a share in 1982, recently traded as low as $19 - making it a tempting morsel for anyone with the money and the inclination to take over its problems and potential.

Observers Split on Direction of Interest Rates

By Michael Quint New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Observers of U.S. credit markets are divided into two roughly even camps --- those expecting rates to rise this year and those expecting lower rates by the middle of the year.

The economic evidence does not yet seem overwhelming in favor of either camp, as new data show the U.S. economy growing at a brisk pace, though less rapidly than the April-September period. The trend in long-term Treasury bond yields, an important measure of investor confidence and a benchmark for such other interest rates as home mortgages, has been upward since early October, when the bellwether 12-percent Treasury issue, due 2013, was yielding about 11.3 perbers reported higher employment while 9 percent reported less. In November, 26 percent said they had higher employment, while 13 — as it did briefly in August and percent had lower employment.

last week, the beliwether 12-per-cent issue was offered at 101 8/32 view that the rate of economic to yield 11.84 percent.

this week are expected to support those who expect the economy to U.S. CREDIT MARKETS be strong enough to keep rates rising irregularly through the year. Henry Kaufman, chief economist at Salomon Brothers, said in the latest issue of Comments on Credit that "reports of continued substantial economic strength" will keep investors worried and offset the benefits of a light supply of new bond issues and the steady policy by the Federal Reserve. Signs of economic strength could cause bond yields to rise because investors would expect the stronger economy to eventually result in fully offsetting decline in borrowings by the Treasury.

Analysts at Smith Barney Harris

Upham, among others, still look for a slowdown in the economy that is normal in the second year of a recovery. "The economic num-

Interest rates might drop slightly if the economy slows, inflation regreater credit demands from busimains low and money supply finds its twin nemeses of inflation nesses and individuals without a growth remains modest, but "prosand ill-behaved money supply pects of either a significant rate numbers at least dormant, if not derating pace of business activity" may be offset by strong growth in retail sales and production during December. But he concluded that pear equally unfounded." For rates to come down sharply it would require a wealth of evidence that a recession is around the corner for the healthy economy portrayed by the new data is not enough to sug-gest much change in interest rates, an essing of Fed policy to avoid a recession.

Neither development is in sight, Mr. Kellner concluded. Nor is the central bank likely to push rates higher "at a time when the Fed finds its twin nemeses of inflation drop or another upward spiral ap- entirely vanquished."

Floating-Rate Notes Are Overshadowing Syndicated Loans

By Carl Gewinz l Herold Tribune

PARIS - In sharp contrast to the international capital market, activity in syndicated bank loans got off to a slow start this year with only a few relatively modest deals

Most experts expect the Euro-band market to dominate the bankloan market, with quality borrow-ers issuing floating-rate notes rather than trying to arrange loans.

This is explained by the continused by the continuing attraction of floating-rate notes to investors who want to maximize their interest income while at the same time keeping their holdings as liquid as possible in case interest rates or the dollar's exchange rate

At the same time, many banks that normally participate in the credit market appear to prefer to put their money into floaters because the marketability of these securities offers them considerably more flexibility for managing their holdings. In addition, banks are attracted by the profit potential.

In a period when many commercial banks are under pressure from their home authorities to increase profits, floaters have much appeal. Commissions can be booked immediately and the notes subsequently sold in the secondary market resulting in no growth of the bank's salance sheet.

In contrast, commissions generated on syndicated loans are taken as income over the life of the loan. which is held to maturity and inflates the balance sheet.

As a result of the large demand, for floaters, the terms borrowers can achieve are considerably more attractive than can be had in the tant for the largest commercial es 10 years are significantly longer ness that might not otherwise come than the five-to-seven-year loans to them - managing some of a

To attract the borrowers, commercial banks most likely will be forced to compromise: Terms on credits will be lower than they might otherwise have been but still remain higher than those of floating-rate notes. The arrangement resembles a syndicated credit insofar as a group of banks is being put together to take these 15-year notes. (A sinking fund reduces the average life of the notes to 12½ years.) However, every six months the notes, denominated in units of $250,000, will be offered to a panel of banks invited to tender for them.

The tender panel will bid for the notes at a discount from face value. The yield derived from being repaid at par will be limited to a maximum equivalent of %-point over Libor. The bidding banks can then sell the paper to private clients, at a lower discount, or hold

If bids are deemed unacceptable, the underwriters will take the paper. For this, they earn an annual fee of 15 basis points.

Texaco, a Sleeping Giant, Wakes With Getty Bid By Thomas J. Lueck New York Tones Service

NEW YORK - For more than a decade, Texaco Inc. has been snown as the most conservative, dow-moving and tightlisted of the major U.S. oil companies. But overnight, by offering what amounts to $10 billion for Getty Oil Co., Texaco, the sleeping giant, has suddenly awakened.

Texaco's offer is the largest in corporate history. And its reason is clear: Texaco, which has quietly watched its energy reserves fall into a rapid decline, would be acquiring

"For Texaco, this may go down as a master stroke," said Timothy J. Quaid of the brokerage house F.

Texaco has been showing signs of breaking out of its conservati-vism ever since John K. McKinley, now 63, was appointed chairman and chief executive officer in 1980. For example, Mr. McKinley has

Two smaller acquisitions last year reflected a growing willingness to chart new directions. In September, Texaco agreed to buy a refinery and 2,600 service stations in Europe from Standard Oil Co. of California. And in November it agreed to buy the relatively small U.S. exploration and production properties of Dome Petroleum Inc., the troubled Canadian oil concern In both cases, Texaco declined to Texaco could face federal antitrust problems in its bid for Getty. Both companies operate refineries One result has been that Texaco in California and have service stafilled its bank accounts with more tions in the same states in the

The analysts predicted that Texaco would be more would increase its reserves of gas to refineries or retail outlets that caused antitrust problems.

GENTLEMEN OF ADVENTURE

By Ernest K. Gann. 445 pp. $16.95. Arbor House, 235 East 45th St., New York,

A leading chronicler of flight, Gann has been spinning tales about aviation for decades. His first book appeared before World War II, "The High and The Mighty" was published in 1953, and several of his best-sellers have been made into movies.

So "Gentlemen of Adventure" is a journey through familiar skies. Sweeping from 1905, two years after the Wright brothers' flight, to 1963, it tracks the airplane's rise from "a questionable plaything . . . to the most powerful system of destruction and potential for victory ever known." In what Gann terms "fictional history," the story develops through three characters: raffish Kiffin Draper; resolute

Toby Bryant, Draper's best friend; and long-suffering Lily Cranwell Bryant, Bryant's wife

One tableau, early in the book, projects vividly where Gann is heading: It's 1915, and young Draper is quarierbacking Nebraska's football team against Iowa. Suddenly he freezes in mid-play, gazing into the sky as the first plane he's ever seen rumbles overhead. Iowa players snatch the ball from his hands and hustle into the end zone. Draper stares at the heavens (with, we visualize, the sort of enraptured expression Carl Sagan often wore in television's "Cosmos"), and a pilot is born.

From there, it's a story of boy meets plane, boy gets plane, boy loses plane. Our jaunty heroes volunteer for the French Foreign Le-and Draper's dream.

Nieuports, Caudrons, DH-4s and DC-1s. Life is turbulent. Toby Bryant smashes his 50-horsepower Bleriot into a French church, is shot down by friendly artillery on the western front, and crashes into a stone quarry after German gunners shoot off his crewman's face. Draper nurses a frozen engine to earth behind German lines, cracks up and loses a leg in the National Air Races and is knocked out of the sky, literally, by an enemy plane over Spain. Lily Bryant, belatedly deciding on flying ("Toby knew from that moment on that he had married the right woman"), nearly dies when her scarf gets tangled during a daredevil wingwalking stunt.

With all its action, however, this is not at heart a novel of plot and character. Its themes are more the drama of flight than of the human condition. Its chief characters are more the planes Gann knows and adores (and, incidentally, has flown himself) than the rather stiff human beings (reminiscent, at times, of those characters in old movies who stand still while the backdrop moves).

The characterization of Lily Bryant is especially troublesome. The idea, apparently, is to show her as a spunky, early liberated woman. While it's unfair to evaluate her by 1980s rules, the portrait does seem contrived. At one point she's referred to as "Mrs. Spoiled Brat," after she has endured, with only wee complaint. Draper's arrival to live with her and her young husband, displacement from Europe's capitals to Nebraska's plains, the poverty of barnstorming the prairie, camping in cow fields and dining on cold pork and beans, a near-fatal career as a daredevil who changes planes in the air and, most serious, a drunken rape by Draper, which she chooses not to reveal to her husband so as not to spoil the men's friendship. You'll have little trouble guessing what she does with the evil Spanish colonel in order to get Draper released from military prison.

Yet, all that said. "Gentlemen of Adventure" has an earnest charm. The book succeeds, not because of literary stylishness or descriptive elegance but because we share Gann's romantic affection for the aircraft and air people of the trailblazing age.

In a sense, this is a love story. Gann has a sometimes lyrical appreciation for the exquisite solitude, terrors and spleadors of flight, a nostalgic admiration for the gung-ho, go-for-it pluck of the first pilots. Like Twain and his river, Gann's muse is the sky. In an age where, Space" and "The Right Stuff" have popular ized the glories of outer space, Gann provides a closer-to-Earth counterpoint, charting space cadethood in its infancy.

Gann's fliers are to the Space Age heroes of: Michener and Wolfe what leather-helmeted old-time football players are to today's drill-precision Dallas Cowboys, and we recall them with a fond feeling. "Gentlemen of Adventure" doesn't rocket majestically skyward like Friendship 7. It tends to rustle and chug through choppy skies, with a simple spirit that is, at last, hard to resist.

Carl Sessions Stepp teaches at the University of Maryland College of Journalism. He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

On a technically demanding 3,230-meter (10,600-foot) course with tricky turns and a vertical drop of 960 meters interspersed with 41 gates, Raber, 25, averaged a speed of 98.5 kilometers per hour (61.2 miles per hour). He nipped Austrian Franz Klammer, at 30 the veteran of the cup ski circuit, by 11-time of 1:57.30. "I felt I kept to the perfect line," Raber said. "I had studied every single turn the day before to decide how I should handle them. It is a difficult track with several slow curves or curves that start right after a compression.

"I had some minor problems in the early turns but then everything went O.K.," he added. "It was the pure contrast to the race I won at Val Gardena" in Italy last month.

We had perfect conditions here." Klammer, who was leading the race at the second intermediate time with a .15-second edge over countryman Gerhard Pfaffenrichler - who finished 11th -and .30 seconds over Raber, said he was pleased with second place "because it shows that I'm on the right track as the Olympics are getting closer.

I made a mistake in a turn and figured I would drop back quite a bit, so I took every possible risk. That's why I almost overshot the last curve," said Klammer, who was competing in his 99th World

Dipping Into Skinny

By William Safire WASHINGTON — In a recent piece, I referred to a leak from the Justice Department as "a puddle of hot, inside skinny."

Seeing those words in print, I experienced the emotion that Frank Mankiewicz has named a klong, the sudden rush of minor horror that seizes your heart when you realize you have forgotten your own dinner party and everyone probably showed up two hours ago. pounded on your door and left in

The reason for my klong in this case is the meaning of skinny. It means "inside information, the real lowdown, the hot poop," As it appeared — "inside skinny" — it was hopelessly redundant or, as some members of the Squad Squad have pointed out, redundundant. All skinny is, ipso facto, "inside," and inside skinny is as unnecessarily repetitive as Tom Brokaw's description of China as "exotically foreign" or the decision by the town fathers of St. Petersburg, Florida, to name a square "Plaza Place," thereby squaring the square.

"Was your reference to 'a puddle of hot, inside skinny intended to titillate," asks Joan Ross of New York City, "or have I missed a leak somewhere? I don't even know what cold, inside skinny is."

I assumed it was a slang term widely understood. For example, it appeared in John Carmody's television column in The Washington Post a few weeks ago: "We'll give you the full skinny tomorrow."

A search of all the slang authorities, from Hotten and Farmer of the 19th century to Partridge and Flexner of the 20th, with a side chase into all my dictionaries of Americanisms and all the current general dictionaries at hand, turns up no such meaning for skinny as the latest scoop from Group. We are not concerned with the meaning of skinny as an adjective, which used to be "excessively thin" and is now "attractively slender." We are on the track of skinny as a noun. In that part of speech, skinny has been reported as denoting a class in chemistry at Annapolis; a similar noun. skin-a-guts, is a very thin person, and a skinner was a member of a marauding gang pro-fessing allegiance to the American cause during the Revolution. Obviously, none of these previous noun current meaning.

Stuart Berg Flexner, placed on the spot for not having this meaning in the latest Dictionary of American Slang, proceeded to knock himself out in researching and speculating about its origin:

"Skinny, as a noun, comes from an earlier adjectival use meaning of, like, or exposing a lot of skin. This use was prevalent from the 16th to the early 20th century: In modern days we say something is skin-colored, but in olden days the term was skinny-colored. In other words, skinny refers to skin itself, and our modern use of this word to mean 'thin' is quite recent. "By 1835, to skin, which had previously been used only to refer to skinning animals, took on the slang meaning of 'to cheat or plagiarize, as on a school test, the image being that one skinned the information from another's brains or paper, and soon thereafter skinny was used by students as a noun to mean 'cheating, especially by plagiarizing or copying another's work.' For example, The Dictionary of Americanisms shows that there was an 1854 Yale University student song which included the line I skinned and fizzled through' in order to graduate. This use of skin and skinmy has continued ever since the 1830s, and by the 1950s students were using skinny to mean the information or inside authoritative facts which one copied or plagia-

The slanguist is ready to pounce.
"It seems to be this student use that was picked up in a description of security leaks as 'hot, inside skinny. Thus skinny, originally meaning the material or facts copied by a student cheating on an exam (which, I guess, is a type of leak), is applied to other information or facts that are obtained surreptitiously or unethically.

"Although the original use of skinny in this cheating and taking of information goes back to the image of skinning an animal, this original image has been lost and I believe that those who use the term now probably relate skinny to 'the bare facts' being exposed as naked. or perhaps even as playing it close to the bone.'

And that's how they talk in Fat City.

The Sudden Rise of the Bard of Albany

By Curt Suplee

VERILL PARK, New York A-Virgil had Rome, and Homer sang the war-sick plains of Troy. Joyce did Dublin, Carl Sandburg limned Chicago and William Kennedy, well, he's got Albany.

As in the Empire State, capital of. A burg once so mired in ignominy that it lacked even the jokebutt celebrity of a Cleveland or Peoria. And only a year ago, a similar oblivion faced its poet laureate, all of whose books are set there: He was broke and worried about how his latest novel, "Ironweed." would be received. And there was reason to worry: His three earlier povels, despite incandescent notices, had sold only a few thousand copies and were out of print.

But Nelson Rockefeller had resuscitated his capital with a sudden gust of greenbacks; and for Kennedy in the past year, "the reversals of my life have been extraordinary — almost every-thing has turned inside out."

"Ironweed" set off critical skyrockets: "Pray for more," said Time; "Among the best of our current American novelists," declared Newsweek. Then the Mac-Arthur Foundation chose Kennedy for one of its $264,000, five-year grants. "It hit me," he says, rummaging for a simile, "like a ton of money." And Viking Press reissued two of his novels — "Billy Phelan's Great-est Game" (1978) and "Legs" (1976) — and will republish "The Ink Truck" (1969) this year.

"Billy" and "Legs" were sold to the movies, and Kennedy was signed to write both scripts. And Francis Ford Coppola tapped him to rewrite the screenplay for "The Cotton Club," the $40-million Harlem epic.

At the end of the year, Viking published "O Albany," his richly anecdotal history of the town. To communal rejoicing: "One of my friends said, 'All we're waiting for now is the statue in the park." Finally. The New York Times Book Review chose "Ironweed" as one of 1983's 13 best books. lauding Kennedy's "tough-mind-

"So why do we like him?" Kennedy muses. "I kept saying to myself, "Why am I writing about this son of a bitch?" Among the book's many answers is Diamond's odd integrity: "It is one thing to be corrupt. It is another to behave in a psychologically responsible way toward your own

HAVANA POSTCARD The Workers' 'Paradise'

By Charles J. Hanley The Associated Press

AVANA—"Welcome to Paradise under the Stars!"

The red lights glare. The trumpets blare. And the leggy, legendary showgirls strut and smile their way onto the vast outdoor stage, kicking off another evening at the "One and Only Tropicana" night-club — a slice of old Havana that thrives in socialist Cuba.

The sequined charistas are as outrageously costumed as ever, the music is as brassy, and the daiquiris as sweet. But 25 years after Fidel Castro's guerrillas took command. Cuba's top nightspot dances to a different tune.

"When I started here in '58, the admission charge alone was out of reach of the Cuban people," said Pedro Pineiro, who began as a 17year-old Tropicana busboy and now helps run the club.

By the time Castro's rebels rolled into the city in January 1959, the Tropicana had come to symbolize the decadence of 1950s Havana, where U.S.-based organized crime had built hotels and gambling casinos, and was profiting - along with corrupt Cuban government officials — from prostitution, drugs and other rackets.

Why was this world-famous entertainment mecca, site of sexy shows twice nightly, spared under straitlaced socialism?

"The Tropicana is the musical image of Cuba," explained the club's administrative director, Ricardo Villanueva Russi.

But there is more to it: A "night at the Tropicana" is one of the biggest draws for tourist dollars in this poor island nation, and for Cuban workers it offers a glamorous respite from an often monoto-
